7. Create a network of area law enforcement officials to immediately address gun and gang violence.
8. Meet with individuals at the local jail who are set to be released from drug and violent crime offenses to make them aware of consequences of future arrest and to provide helpful information about service providers they can use for assistance.
9. Conduct home visits with probation and juvenile probation officials checking on recently released individuals.

Worcester PD has made approximately 2,000 home visits each year to probationers, arrested 10 violators, and identified 40 previously unknown gang members.

Worcester PD's summer camp program works with 300 youth from diverse and isolated parts of the city for a 3-week program to provide gang prevention/intervention and help bring down barriers between youth and between youth and the police.

Worcester PD addressed 2,000 6th graders to inform them about what gangs are, discuss common myths about gangs, and help define resistance skills.

Police/clergy program has increased from two to ten churches and a local neighborhood center (with about 350 youth participants) to reach, assist, and refer youth that have been affected or influenced by substance abuse or crime.

Identified service gaps for GED program for youth testing below a 7th grade level which gave rise to a new GED class.
